ABSTRACT

This study aims to analyze the Implementation of the Regional Government Information Site (SIPD) at the Regional Finance and Asset Agency (BKAD) of Situbondo Regency. The method used is descriptive qualitative and data collection techniques using interviews. The results of the study indicate that the Implementation of the Regional Government Information System at the Regional Finance and Asset Agency of Situbondo Regency has been running quite well, but there are still some challenges. From the communication aspect, the delivery of information about SIPD has been conveyed through various channels, such as social media, circulars and socialization, so that it can help user understanding. In terms of resources, it is quite good, but there are obstacles in the aspect of equipment resources that still often experience trouble/errors in the application so that it can hinder optimal performance. The disposition aspect shows that implementers still need to improve training for employees so that they can deepen the old system to the new system. In addition, although there are already SOPs that refer to applicable regulations, there is no written SOP specifically for the use of SIPD. Therefore, the implementation of SIPD is still constrained by complex bureaucratic procedures and is not fully adaptive to the SIPD application. Overall, the implementation of SIPD provides a real contribution to realizing more transparent and accountable regional financial governance in Situbondo Regency.
