ABSTRACT

In this study, the aim is to analyze the Implementation of the Regional Government Information System of the Republic of Indonesia at the Summersari District Office in Jember Regency. The methods used in this study are qualitative descriptive and data collection techniques using interviews. The results of the study show that the implementation of the Regional Government Information System of the Republic of Indonesia at the Summersari District Office in Jember Regency has been running well, but there are still some obstacles. From the communication aspect, the delivery of information about SIPD RI has been conveyed through various channels, such as circulars and whatsApp groups, so that it can help users understand. From the aspect of resources, it is quite good, but there are obstacles in the aspect of equipment resources, namely the system that still often experiences errors and inadequate internet networks, so that it has an impact on less than optimal performance. The disposition aspect shows that the implementer still needs to strengthen the discipline and accuracy of users in entering data into the SIPD RI. The aspects of the bureaucratic structure between the fields have run well and are coordinated with each other, but there is still no written SOP specifically regarding the use of SIPD RI in detail. Overall, the implementation of SIPD RI makes a real contribution to realizing more transparent and accountable regional financial governance at the Summersari District Office.
