ABSTRACT

This study aims to analyze the management of National Health Insurance (JKN) capitation funds at the Banjarsengon BLUD Community Health Center. Capitation funds are payments received by Primary Health Care Facilities (FKTP) from BPJS Kesehatan based on the number of registered participants. The method used in this study is qualitative with a descriptive approach, employing data collection techniques such as interviews with informants including the Head of the Banjarsengon Community Health Center and the Community Health Center Treasurer. The results of the analysis indicate that capitation fund management is carried out through the processes of budgeting, implementation, accountability, and supervision in accordance with applicable regulations, utilizing the BLUD financial management system. Consequently, capitation fund management can be conducted more flexibly to support the effectiveness of health services provided to the community.
